Dear Richard,

We are writing to notify you that the following press release has been placed on dispute hold: Press release ID #13864426 entitled "New Book About Former Chadbourne & Parke Employee Alleges Race Discrimination, Sexual Harassment, and Retaliation at Chadbourne & Parke's New York Law Firm."

PRWEB releases are taken off line and put on Dispute/Hold when and if we are notified of potentially libelous information or a serious inaccuracy that affects a person, company or organization named in the release.

Releases may also be put on hold when we learn that the information in a release may violate copyright law or PRWEB's Terms of Service or when we are informed that the submitter does not have authorization to release information on behalf of the organization or person named in the release.

In this case, we have been informed by Chadbourne & Parke that the following is untrue, and constitutes defamation, slander and libel. "The true story of a mailroom clerk [who] faced gender and race discrimination, and was repeatedly called the 'N-word,' and sexually harassed on numerous occasions"; that the Firm committed supposed "wage and hour violations"; that "the mailroom clerk was retaliated against, and wrongfully terminated." They are also claiming that allegation that they had a serious OSHA violation and had to pay a penalty for an employee's death in the office is clearly defamatory.

Since PRWEB relies on users to submit accurate information in their press releases, we cannot be the arbiters of whether to put the release back in circulation. We will only take the release off dispute hold when and if both parties submit to us that the original or revised release should be taken off Dispute/Hold.

Thank you. For your reference, our terms of service are located at <http://www.prweb.com/tos.php>

Again, PRWEB editors will not get involved in approving or modifying the release further until and unless both you and Chadbourne & Parke contact us, asking us to put this release back on line. If you have other questions or concerns, please contact us.

Sincerely,

PRWeb Editors
